

Amy Wallace # 27
DSPW 0800 1:25 p.m.
Dr. Christian
October 7th, 2004

9/10

Birthday in Sirap

Way to Go

One early morning I jumped out of bed excited and ready for the day. Today was my sixteenth birthday and I wanted to get an early start. After I finished getting dressed, I walked into my room to find a strange looking man sitting on my bed. I screamed and I asked him who he was and what he was doing in my room. He said his name was Esirprus and he was there to take me anywhere I wanted to go in the world. At first I did not believe him, but I told him I have always wanted to go to a city called Sirap that had hundreds of shopping stores. Before I could say another word, Esirprus had grabbed my hand and we ~~had~~ disappeared. I looked up and all I saw was the blue sky and clouds. I looked around and noticed we were flying on a big, white, fluffy cloud. The cloud felt like cotton balls. We began to <sup>ask</sup> dwindle down into the fog. I gracefully stepped down as we drifted closer to the ground. My breath was taken away by Sirap. It was just like I had imagined. The city of Sirap was one big shopping mall endlessly filled with stores. The ground was of nothing I had ever known before. It reminded me of moss, cushioning my foot <sup>made</sup> at every step I took. For my birthday, Esirprus told me he would buy anything and everything I wanted. <sup>with</sup> I wished <sup>ask</sup> to my shoes! I saw a golden sign hanging above the revolving doorway of a store that read Shoes. I took one step into the store and froze in amazement. The store was filled wall to wall with shoes. They had shoes of every color, shape, size, and brand. The cheerful employees sat me down in a chair and took care of everything. They measured my foot, brought me my shoes, and even put them on for me.

After buying a couple pairs of shoes, I went into the jean store, the jacket store, then the jewelry store. After many hours shopping, I decided it was time to go back home and see my family. So we hopped back on the cloud and headed for my house. Suddenly I found myself standing in my room with Esirprus beside me. I <sup>le</sup>Hugged and thanked him for all the wonderful gifts. After putting all my new presents away, I went to tell my family about my exciting day in Sirap!

Very nice!
creative!