

Amy Wallace

DSPW 0800 1:25

Dr. Christian

December 3rd, 2004

Last Impression

When we were first told that we were going to read Harry Potter, I was not thrilled. First of all, I do not like to read much, unless it is something that I have chosen for myself. Secondly, I did not think that Harry Potter was going to be the type of book that I would be interested in. I thought the book was going to be filled with magic, tricks, and wizards. I am really not that interested in wizardry things. Once I started reading Harry Potter, my hypothesis was wrong. I could not make myself put the book down. The whole book kept leaving me in suspense, wanting to know what was going to happen next. I would come to a point that would seem to be a good stopping point, but instead I would continue reading so that I could find out what was going to happen next.

One of my favorite aspects of the book was how the whole time I was reading, the book kept leading me to believe that I knew what was going to happen at the end. Instead it turned out to be something totally different that I was not expecting to happen. While I was reading the book, I kept thinking that it was professor Snape as the person who was hated Harry Potter, and wanting to steal the sorcerer's stone. I was extremely shocked when I came to find out it was professor Quirrell. I would have never expected it was professor Quirrell. Throughout the book, everything that occurred seemed to point the reader into making them think it was Professor Snape. For example, while Harry was playing Quidditch for the first time, and he almost fell off his broom. This made the readers think that Professor Snape was trying to kill Harry. "Snape was in the middle the stands opposite them. He had his eyes fixed on Harry and was muttering nonstop under his breath." (pg. 190) Hermione and Ron assumed he was jinxing the broom. Of course, this made me go along with believing that Professor Snape who did not like Harry. Instead at the end of the book, I came to find out Snape was the one who was trying to break the curse that Professor Quirrell had put on the broom.

Some other aspects of the book I liked were the stunts that Harry, Ron, and Hermione got themselves into. It was fascinating to hear how that beat the troll that came in on Halloween night. It was also fascinating to hear how Harry beat professor Quirrell and Voldemort. How they dealt with the dragon that Hagrid had won. I also liked how the book kept talking about how hard Harry's life was while he was living with his muggle relatives. I came to feel really sorry for Harry and wanted to help him so much. After he got to go to the Wizardry school, I was very excited for him. I was glad he was finally going to be able to make friends, and he was going to be able to be treated right and not so badly.

What I think is going to happen next is Voldemort will return. I do not think Voldemort will ever die. I believe he will return in every series until the last one. I believe he might die in the last one, and I believe Harry will be the one to kill him. I think Voldemort will return again though in the next one to come back to kill Harry. I do not think Voldemort liked the fact that Harry beat him, and he was unable to get the sorcerer's stone like his plan. I think he will want to get revenge on Harry. He might even try to take over the school or something to make Harry's life worse. I also think Harry will do really well in wizardry school. I believe he will be one of the top students, next to Hermione. I really do not know what exactly is going to happen next. This is my assumption, but I do know that I will be reading the next series so I can find out what really does happen.